Managing the Corporate Immigration
Policy: Opportunities and Challenges

Employment-based immigration law gives companies a number of tools for acquiring the best talent for hard-to-fill positions in technology, health care, international business, and a variety of other industries. The employment-based immigration process needs to be managed internally, however, to prevent needless expense and waste of effort by HR and other employees of the company; to protect the company's interests; and to ensure legal compliance by the company and the employee.

This presentation will review key legal and corporate policy issues companies will need to consider in managing the immigration function. Participants will come away with an understanding of the immigration process and of the important policy choices that should be made by any organization hiring persons not born in the United States.
